Bishop Ted Collins laid to rest
The requiem Mass of Bishop Ted Collins was held on August 19th in Darwin. It was an uplifting commemoration of his life and in particular recognised his real commitment to Aboriginal people.

Fr. Tim Brennan gave the homily which can be downloaded here.

Perhaps the most moving part of the funeral was the Lirrga dance by members of the Wadeye community as well as the singing and dance of the Tiwi communities as they sang in the Gospel and at other times such as the Lamb of God and the Aboriginal Our Father. It was wonderful to see such seamless integration of both Aboriginal and Catholic cultural practices.

Below are some of the photos sent to us by the Darwin Diocese Youth Ministry. All photos are credited to Mark Crocombe.

The research report behind the adverts that we see on the TV and other places is interesting. One of the key findings is:

- Discrimination against Indigenous Australians is considered one of the most prevalent forms of discrimination in Australia.
- Witnessing acts of discrimination is widespread, with more than half of non-Indigenous Australians claiming that they have witnessed acts of discrimination towards Indigenous Australians.

The report can be accessed at Beyond Blue - click here
Further information about the effects of discrimination can be found here.

The calls for Treaty continue

This video, published by concerned Australians, highlights that many Aboriginal people are still calling for properly negotiated treaties with the Australian Government.

Strong Cultural identity helps students succeed at School

Research currently being undertaken by Lynette Riley at Sydney University makes clear the link between a strong cultural identity and those Aboriginal students who have achieved success in NAPLAN tests as highlighted in a recent article in New Matilda:

"Lynette's research shows that every Aboriginal student who performed well in NAPLAN also had a strong sense of their cultural identity; a strong pride in their Aboriginality.

It raises questions about how denial of Aboriginality can affect a child's success at school.

And it answered a question Ms Riley was confronted with when she first began the research.

"I actually had a colleague ask whether the reason these kids are doing so well in school was perhaps because they were more assimilated," Ms Riley told New Matilda.

"It wasn't specifically a question I looked at, but I did suss it out. I wanted to see what the kids thought, but all of them said that it wasn't that they were assimilating into the school, it was that schools were being accommodating to them and were helping them to understand their Aboriginality.

"These kids had a strength in their identity".

Bishop Greg Thompson delivers Morpeth Lecture

The Anglican Bishop of Newcastle, the Right Reverend Greg Thompson, recently gave the Morpeth lecture where he reflected on the relationship between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal people.

Bishop Greg was the Bishop of the Northern Territory for seven years as well as having several years experience in community organisations.

The transcript is also available here.
